Death of a Very Popular Kamaaina

There is no more popular family in Honolulu than the Dowsett family. The death of the oldest son, which occurred last evening at Puuloa, was a shock to the many friends of the deceased.

James I. Dowsett, Jr., had been sick for the last two years. Through a fall he contracted a disease of brain which finally caused his death. It was hoped by his many friends that he would eventually recover, and his able physician, Dr. Herbert, gave hope to that effect. It is understood that there were possibilities for an operation which probably could have been performed in the near future and which might have relieved the sufferer.

It was not the will of providence, however and the deceased died through a stroke of paralysis.

James Dowsett, the younger, was the oldest son of the Honorable James Dowsett, and was born on the 9th of November, 1858. He was consequently only 37 years of age. He was born in Honolulu, and received his education here and in San Francisco, and was always known as a bright and clever young fellow.

In 1887-88 he represented Honolulu in the Legislature and there as elsewhere made himself beloved and respected.

It is a great misfortune to Hawaii that one of her best sons should be called away and depart from the field of earthly usefulness.

The deceased was married to Hattie Jones who survives him and with two young children mourn their loss. The disease of young Dowsett made it necessary to keep him in seclusion and during the last two years he resided at Puuloa under the constant care of his faithful friend John DeFries, who day and night was in attendance, and who closed the eyes of his beloved companion of youth.

"Jimmy" Dowsett had no enemies in Hawaii. He inherited his hospitable and genial character from his parents, and although his sickness forced him away from old associations during the last few years he was never forgotten, and his friends to-day feel sad by his demise, although he probably thereby was delivered from suffering and an unenviable existence.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon from the Dowsett residence at Palama.

MAUI'S FUNNY WAYS.

Opium Brown Returned.

Our Maui correspondent this time writes to us in regard some doings of Lahaina officials. Last Sunday, we are told, the pious church goers of that capital were astonished by seeing a whale boat in command of the captain of the police under special instructions of the youthful deputy sheriff leave the wharf and go to sea. Everybody felt confident that the filibusters had been sighted and that the valiant captain had been ordered out as a scout.

The tension in the small community was great but peace reigned once more when it was learned that the "Sunday" expedition was dispatched simply to serve a civil process in equity on the owner of Lanai. Under the old regime services of civil process on Sunday were illegal. Under the present of "Christian" government the sabbath in Lahaina at least seems to be not sacred and a proper day for the authorities to do their business on.

The good folks of Lahaina had another surprise though. While the brilliant deputy-sheriff was devoting his time in solving some astronomical problems or watering his flower-garden—his two pet occupations; and while his burly captain was at his home trying to explain certain tangled domestic troubles with his better half; a strange "lady" appeared in the streets, made certain observations, called at certain prominent Chinese stores, did some buying (?) or selling and then disappeared quietly to a boat anchored some distance from the town and proceeded to a floating castle on the briny deep.

The "lady" was recognized. She was "Opium Brown," who is among us again.

The Healanis

The Healanis Boat Club met last evening. The annual reports were read, and it was shown that the finances of the club are in a very satisfactory condition. Two hundred dollars were subscribed for new pleasure boats. The following officers were elected: T. F. Lansing, president; J. W. Winter, vice-president; A. V. Gear, secretary; F. B. Oat, treasurer; C. L. Crabbe, auditor; board of directors to consist of E. Towse, F. L. Waldron, F. Hammer and A. W. Meyer.
